

Team-building with traditional eco-friendly skills

Taste the Wild, with 18 acres of woodland in North Yorkshire, is known for its courses on the identification of edible wild plants and their culinary uses. Now, its director, Chris Bax is introducing something different, with real food, the outdoors and a renewal of interest in traditional skills. 'We believe this is the only eco-friendly activity day on offer in Yorkshire. There's nothing else quite like it!'

Taste the Wild has developed four unique multi-activity packages. The aim is for corporate groups to enjoy entertaining activities whilst learning new skills. The Participants can demonstrate creativity, practicality, leadership, sharing and a sense of fun.

Chris has worked on popular TV shows, such as BBC Countryfile and Country Tracks, and has been an advisor to newspapers and publishers. Becky Pratt, director of BBC Countryfile, says: 'Chris fizzes with passion and enthusiasm – he knows his stuff and he knows how to make it exciting for others, a combination of knowledge and humour that makes him a captivating watch!'

Both Chris and his wife Rose have worked hard to produce the inspirational and creative packages ready for the new season.

Emma Davis, Senior Project Co-ordinator at Investors in the Environment, says: 'What is on offer sounds fantastic and different from the norm!'
